

Who were the Iron Age Celts and where did they come from?

The Iron Age Celts were a tribe of people who lived all over Europe over two thousand years ago. The period of time in Britain immediately before the Romans period is known as the Iron Age. From around 750BC to 12BC, the Celts were the most important people in central and northern Europe. These fierce warriors fought their way across most of Europe during the Iron Age. The name Celts is a modern name. The Romans called the Celts Britons. The word Celts Comes from the Greek word, keltoi.

When they settled in Britain the Celts lived in small farming communities. The Iron Age ended in 43AD when the Romans arrived but there are still a lot of Celts living in the British Isles today. They live in Brittany, Cornwall, Wales, Ireland, Scotland, and the Isles of Man. Their culture lives on today in music, dance, story and song.
